

Transit passengers

Transit passengers on aircraft continuing their onward journey by the same or first connecting aircraft do not require visas as they are normally required to spend the transit period in the airport transit area and are not allowed to leave that area without prior authorization of an Immigration Officer.

Transit passengers on board ships must be in possession of passports but do not require visas to go ashore while their vessel is in port. Facilities for such persons to go ashore are arranged between the master of the ship and an Immigration Officer at the port of call. If, however, any visit to Namibia is contemplated or the passenger departs by aircraft or another ship, the person concerned requires an entry or transit visa, if he/she is a national of a country whose citizens require visas.
